A correspondent of "Laws of Life, who claims to have had extended experience, is decidedly of the opinion 2 that apples keep far better when put into close boxes or barrels, and secluded as much as possible from the will come out in the spring, full and air. When thus stored, he says they plump as when taken from the tree. Z Many varieties as the Talman Sweet, Spitzenburg, and those kinds that are not considered as long keepers and shrivel badly, will do well treated in this way. I have, he continues, found universally, that they keep better to them lie without picking over. It is much better to pile them into a large bin across the cellar, say six or even feet high and four or five feet wide, and cover them up tightly, than | 70 to lay them on shelves.

I once saw such a bin that a man the first of April he thought he would open the windows on the side of the had kept through the winter. About air that they might keep better. I was at his place and he called my attention to the fact. Two windows just over the bin were opened about ten days or two weeks. And the apples exactly opposite the windows about one-third rotted for as much as a foot in depth, and the remaining part on either side were not rotted

Another instance: A neighbor of mine had about five hundred bushels in a pile in a cellar. As they became a little specked he commenced picking over; when about half done, got tired and concluded to let them go. When marketed about six weeks after, found that about one-third of those picked over were not fit for market, while about one-twentieth of the others were all good. This have seen in numerous instances. If you wish to try the experiment, make a box as tight as a carpenter can make it, and when picking from the orchard fill it and nail it fast. Let it lie in the orchard till it is in danger of freezing; then put it in the cellar. Put the same quantity on shelves for trial. I am pretty sure one experiment will convince.

Cotton Seed as a Manure.

None of us are aware of the real value of cotton seed as a manure, or as food for stock. That able chemist, Prof. Johnson, has recently made some experiments and observations nure and food for cattle that are really astonishing and worthy the attention of all interested. He shows that it is really superior to all other articles as a manure, and not much inferior to any other article as food for stock We should have, and I hope the time is not far distant when we will have machinery on a small scale that can be attached to the gin-house, to express the oil from the cotton seed. Until then the best mode of using cotton seed for manure is to fix up a machine in the giu-house, to be run by the gin power, to crush the seed. An orlinary sorghum cane crusher, made of two cylinders, only set up horizontally instead of perpendicularly, could be set up at a trifling expense, and would crush five hundred bushels per day. When they are crushed, either throw in pens and compost them with earth, putting down six inches of earth, then six inches of cotton seed. alternating until you have filled up a pen ten or fifteen feet high, to be hauled out in the spring and distribu-ted, or you can take it into the field immediately from the crusher, and plow it under. If cotton land, put the seed into a deep furrow and bed on it. If corn land, always spead it broadcast and plowunder,-Jackson

A good story is told of a rather verdant agricultural laborer, who having by hook and by crook scraped together fifty dollars, took it to his employer, with a request to take charge of it for him. A year after the laborer went to another friend to know what would be the interest on it. He was told three dollars. "Well, said he, "I wish you would lend me three dollars for a day or two. My boss has been keeping fifty dollars for me a year, and I want to pay him the interest for it."
